Name: Aldison Kenneth Kwok

Class: 10.1

Date: 30/7/2026

Instructions

Choose one footage (scene) from the news clip. Analyze how media bias is presented by completing the chart below. Support your answers with evidence from the footage.

Minute 4:54 to 5:49

Media Framing Element	What did you observe in the chosen footage?	How could this influence the audience?
Language Use	The video uses positive language for this part of the video to show contrast so that the video isn't biased	The audience might feel more hopeful for the country of Somalia and that not all about it is bad

Emotional Appeal	The reporter uses a hopeful tone near the beautiful beaches to show and make the audience feel that not all of Somalia is about never-ending wars	The audience becomes less hit by terrible facts about the situation in Somalia and instead invited to see the bright side instead
Visual Footage	The video shows a video of the popular, beautiful landscape of the Lido beach with people having fun in the waves.	This makes the audience think more to the good side of Somalia rather than the conflictful side
Credibility of Sources	The reporter travels directly to the country and records evidential footage of what it feels like to live in Somalia and how families are barely able to survive on lower than minimum wage.	This makes the audience more convinced and trust the reporter and/or the news provider more
Overall Media Bias	The reporter in starts biases the situation in Somalia as dangerous and nearly impossible to live normally. And, at the end of the video the reporter shows a short clip of the beautiful beaches that come with the country.	The audience trusts the reporter more because he talks about both sides with opposite perspectives

Reflection

1. How might the audience's opinion change if the report used different words, visuals, or sources?

If the report used different words, visuals, or sources, the audience's opinion would definitely change dramatically. For example, if the report showed the clip of the stunning beaches before the sound of gunshots, it would make the audience feel more frightened because according to science humans tend to focus on the ending more than the start.

2. Do you think the report is balanced? Explain your answer using evidence from the clip.

I think that this report is a bit biased because the reporter shows to the rest of the world more about the civil war situation in Somalia than the brighter side of the country where there is still peace and hope
